LSAT: Law School Admissions Test

If you are applying to a U.S. Law School for a J.D. Program, most universities will require you to take the LSAT entrance exam. The LSAT is not offered in Saudi Arabia and the closest test sites are in Cairo, Egypt (AMIDEAST), Beirut, Lebanon (AMIDEAST), Amman, Jordan (AMIDEAST) and Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates (AMIDEAST). For more information on the LSAT including details, registration, test locations, and study guides, visit the Law School Admissions Council website at: <http://www.lsac.org/>

LSAT Scoring:

Your LSAT score is based on the number of questions answered correctly (the raw score). There is no deduction for incorrect answers, nor are individual questions on the various test sections weighted differently.

Raw scores are converted to an LSAT scale that ranges from 120 to 180, with 120 being the lowest possible score and 180 the highest possible score. This is done through a statistical procedure known as equating, a method that adjusts for minor differences in difficulty between test forms.
